

The map displays the Pacific Northwest coastline, including parts of Washington, Oregon, and California. Twelve sampling locations are marked along the coast, connected by a line. The locations are represented by circles of varying shades of green and blue, indicating different levels of genetic differentiation. The locations are distributed from the northern coast of Washington down to the southern coast of California. The map also shows major cities like Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco, and the coastline of the Pacific Ocean.